This talk provides a broader historical and theoretical context for academic and policy debates on rising powers. It takes the current case of China's rise and the United States' response to it as a primary example, but looks also back to the most recent – albeit often neglected – historical case of an established power 'meeting' a rising power: the United States' response to 'rising Japan' over the 1980s.

Nicola Nymalm is Associate Senior Lecturer/Assistant Professor in War Studies at the Swedish Defence University. She is the author of 'From 'Japan Problem' to 'China Threat'? (Palgrave Macmillan, 2020).
